Requirements

Established one-to-one program

A one-to-one Mac or iPad program for students and faculty has been in place for more than two academic years. All students in a school use Apple devices as their primary learning device, and all teachers use Apple devices as their primary teaching device.

Innovative use of the Apple platform

Faculty deeply integrates Apple apps (Photos, iMovie, GarageBand, Pages, Keynote, Numbers, iBooks Author, and Clips), educational apps from the App Store, books from Apple Books, and other digital resources into the curriculum.

Faculty proficiency with iPad or Mac

Teachers are highly proficient in the use of Apple products. For K–12 schools in the United States, 75 percent of teachers in a school must be recognized as Apple Teachers before the Apple Distinguished School application deadline. For higher education faculty, Apple Teacher recognition is recommended. To learn more about becoming an Apple Teacher, visit www.apple.com/education/apple-teacher.

Documented results

Evidence of student success is documented through school-based research practices that measure year-to-year improvement and program sustainability. Faculty and students demonstrate how best practices in learning and teaching are continuously evolving with Apple technology. Apple Learning Technologies Survey is recommended for all K–12 schools in the United States.
